The cross-curriculum in a globalised world into the teaching and cross-curriculum priorities core content.

Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander cultures

Across the Western Australian curriculum, students learn about the traditional knowledge of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander communities. Students develop a deeper understanding gain to participate positively in society.

The Humanities and Social Sciences curriculum provides an opportunity to learn about the traditional knowledge of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander Peoples from a historical perspective. This provides an opportunity to explore the interconnectedness, and the role of culture in society.

Asia and Australia's relationships

Across the Western Australian curriculum, students learn about and recognise the role of Asia in the region. Students develop a deeper understanding of the role of Asia in the region.

◀ Return to Humanities and Social Sciences

beliefs, and environments in Australia, and the role of communication and education in the region.

The Humanities and Social Sciences explore the past, present, and future of Australia and the Asia-Pacific region. This priority also focuses on the relationship between places, environments, and people.

Sustainability

Across the Western world, there is a growing concern to develop the knowledge and skills that contribute to sustainability enablement and engaging with the world on protecting environments through informed action. This requires consideration of the interdependence of the environment, society, and the economy.

The Humanities and Social Sciences explore the human dependence on the environment and the role of judgment in decision-making as well as local and global wellbeing of our world. This includes sustaining a resilient society and citizens in discussing the future of the world.
